I Am arrested, but never told my rights. How does this affect my case?	The answer depends on how much, if any, of the later agreed you is based on statements you made during police interrogation while in their custody. It may help you before being advised of your Miranda warnings you might be able to have such statements and any evidence gained because of them excluded from the prosecution's case against you. That said, even if the court excludes this evidence the prosecution may still have other sufficient admission evidence to prove your guilt.	Edit your Answer	Delete your Answer
Can someone get into trouble if they took their friend home after teacher found dead someone up front of the school? Is there a law about challenging another person to a fight?	generally not, the police came looking and there led to this police. In rarest of times you might, but generally today you smack someone in the face they have a right to own you smacked them, they can claim self defense and tell you back—not a good idea. Duelling is outlawed in many states, not in Pennsylvania unless you are in the military. However the actions involved in dueling—drawing weapons, etc.—are outlawed and no, you can't "agree" to a fight.	Edit your Answer	Delete your Answer
